Droste & Sons Construction Company is nominated by the Historic Landmark Preservation and Architectural Review Board with respect and admiration for an outstanding assemblage of completed historic preservation projects.

Now a third generation St. Charles company guided by Jim and Steve Droste, their prominence as a respected general contractor on preservation and restoration projects ensues from the impressive skill and craftsmanship of their carpentry team to their group of specialized professional subcontractors. Jim and Steve attend to all details from the selection of the highest quality materials to securing unique specialty items and solving problems peculiar to the historic restoration challenge.

Respect for the partnership required between owner, architect and contractor in order to complete notable historic restoration projects is the guiding principle in Jim and Steve's approach to each job regardless of its size or complexity.

Droste Construction has completed twenty three Main Street National Register Historic District projects and three Frenchtown National Register District projects, predominantly commercial structures. They have completed eleven renovations in the Midtown neighborhood and thirteen others for architecturally important structures, most in our extended preservation districts. Their signature quality is evident throughout our community.
